Read the whole Bible through in a year? The prospect of reading the Bible through in a year can seem overwhelming. The Bible is a formidable volume, as long as six ordinary books. The entire Bible can be read aloud, however, in 70 hours or so. Thus, by reading about 15 minutes per day, the Bible can be completed in a year.

How should I use this schedule? This reading schedule was designed to provide a portion of Scripture from the Old and New Testaments each day. You may choose to read the Old Testament portion in the morning and the New Testament portion in the evening, or read both portions together. This flap can be removed, and the schedule can be separated into two panels to be used as bookmarks.

How can I understand what I read? Ask God to help you, as David prayed (Psalm 119:34): "Give me understanding, and I shall keep thy law; yea, I (continued on other side)" shall observe it with my whole heart." Approach the Word reverently and with an attitude of obedience. It has been observed that God's will is "exactly what I would choose if I knew all the facts." As God grants us understanding of His word, we are more motivated to obey it. And as we obey it we gain greater insight into it. Whole-hearted obedience comes when what we should do and what we want to do are the same thing. God is at work in us both to will and to do His good pleasure (Philippians 2:13). Your pastor can help you find resources that will assist you in understanding God's Word.

Once I finish the whole Bible, what should I do? Start again! As God brings us through the various experiences of our lives, verses we never noticed before seem to leap from the page with new meaning.
